

CALCUMATE

Adding Calcumate to your website:

- Getting setup
- Embedding with iframes
- Domain mismatch message

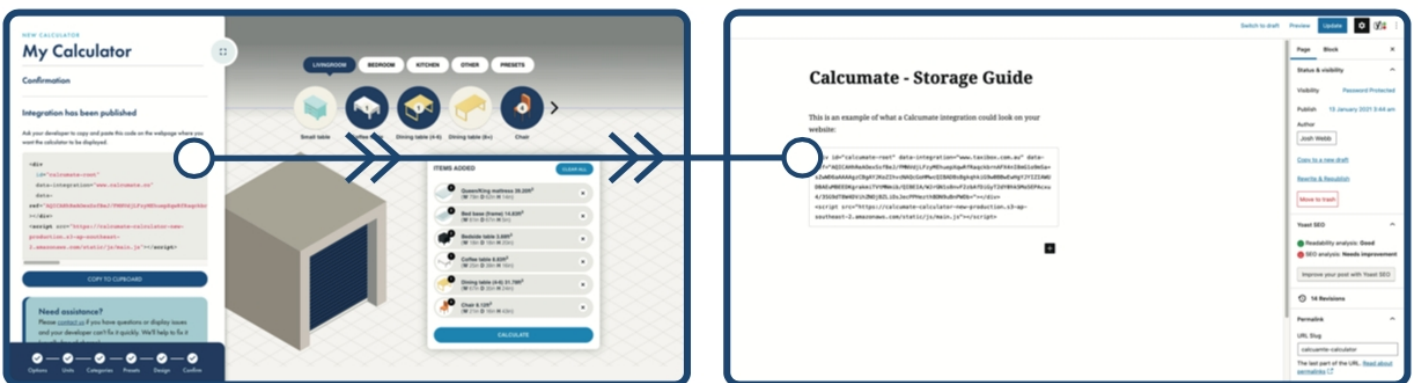

Getting Setup

Once you've signed up to Calcumate, login and create your first calculator - adding your unit (or truck) dimensions, furniture and your own company branding.

Happy? Publish your calculator to receive your unique code snippet. Then, copy & paste the code onto any page of your website's domain (it can even be added to multiple pages). If you're using a website editor, you will want the 'custom html' or 'embed code' option.

Alternatively, if you're not using a web editor, a developer should be able to simply paste this code snippet to the designated page.

Need to make changes to your integration? No problem, simply login to your Calcumate account and make any changes you need to. Your site will be automatically updated with these latest changes.

Embedding with iframes

If you're adding your integration through web editors like Wix or GoDaddy, then your Calcumate integration will likely be added inside an iframe.

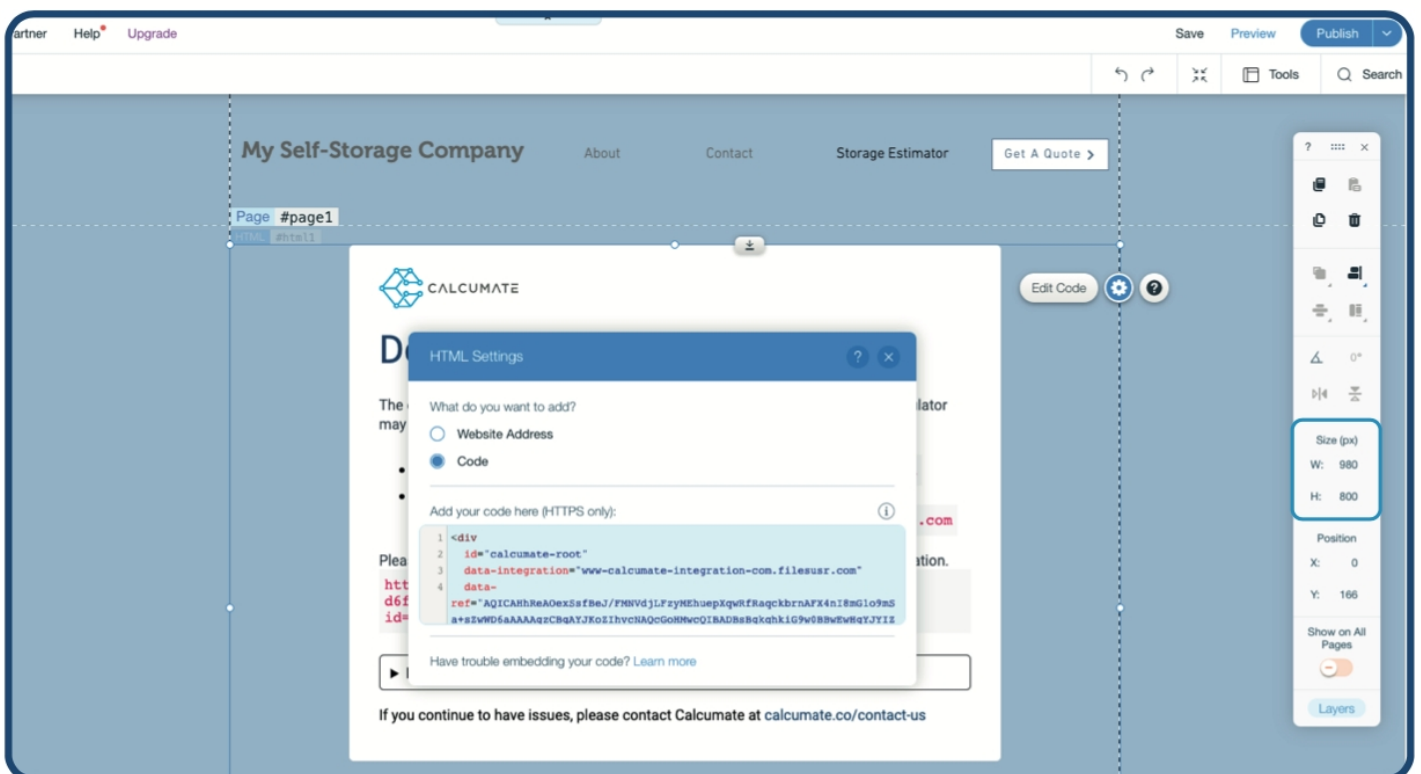

This shouldn't impact the performance of either your website or your Calcumate integration, but you may need to manually set the height and width of the iframe in order for it to appear correctly on your website.

Importantly, you'll need to set the dimensions for both desktop and mobile devices.

We recommend:

Desktop: 980px x 800px

Mobile: 350px x 850px

Domain Mismatch Error

This error message appears when the domain set for your Calcumate integration doesn't match the one your integration has been embedded onto. Commonly this is because of either a spelling mistake or because of the way our database reads your domain.

Either way, the good news is there's a simple solution.

1. Copy the URL that our error message has recommended.
2. Login to your Calcumate account and paste the URL in step 1 of the integration builder.
3. Continue through the steps and re-publish your integration code snippet.
4. Copy this new integration and use it to replace the existing code on your website.
5. Go to the right page and clear your cache, before completing a hard refresh of your browser.
